

The proposal to allow internet data transmission over power lines is ill-conceived because it would introduce damaging interference to many radio services, including the amateur radio service. The amateur radio service has proven itself indispensable in many recent disasters including 9/11, the Columbia shuttle accident and many weather related recent disasters. The unreliability of the power grid, on the other hand, was graphically demonstrated last night when the entire Northeastern grid shut down for many hours.